1. Dear Club Organiser,

I am writing to suggest a fairer way to collect feedback about the study club. An online form is convenient for some members, but it may exclude those with unreliable internet access. Please offer a short paper version at the club as well. Both versions should ask the same clear questions. Members should be able to mention difficulties as well as benefits, and they should have enough time to answer without pressure. A box for anonymous paper responses could encourage honest comments.

When publishing the results, please state how many members responded and describe the group accurately. If only ten people answer, their views should not be presented as the views of all thirty members. These changes would help the club make useful decisions and build trust.

Yours sincerely,

Tharushi

2. Nine of the ten members who answered the optional survey rated the study club very useful. Further feedback is needed from the twenty members who did not respond.

Page 2: The percentage needs a question

1. Eighteen; the percentage describes the twenty respondents, not necessarily all forty invited members.

The answer must match the stated details; accept equivalent accurate wording.

2. Eighteen of the twenty respondents said they enjoyed the activity.

Check the complete meaning, the verb and punctuation. Accept an equally accurate correction.

3. Eighteen of the twenty members who replied said they enjoyed the new activity. This is encouraging feedback from the respondents, but only half of the forty invited members replied. We cannot assume that the others shared the same opinion. The club should invite further comments through a short paper form as well as the online survey, then consider practical improvements.

This is one model. Accept a relevant response that includes the requested details, uses clear language and does not invent claims about the source.
